

Therapy Chat Episode 314

Disclaimer: This is a verbatim transcript which may contain spelling errors.

[00:00:00] Laura Reagan: Therapy chat podcast, episode 314.

[00:00:02] Announcer: This is the therapy chat podcast with Laura Reagan LCS. WC. The information shared in this podcast is not a substitute for seeking help from a licensed mental health professional. And now here's your host, Laura Reagan LCSW.

[00:00:32] Laura Reagan: therapists interested in making it easier for your clients to use their out of network benefits for their. Visit the super bill.com to learn more about superbill, a service that can help your clients get reimbursed without having to jump through hoops. Getting started is simple clients, go to the super bill.com to complete a quick HIPAA compliance sign up process, and you send their super bills directly to us.

[00:00:53] Laura Reagan: So we can file claims with their insurance companies. No more spending hours on the phone. Wrangling with insurance companies for reimbursement, super bill eliminates that hassle. And clients paid only a low monthly fee for the service. Stay tuned for details on superbills therapist, referral program, and a special discount for your clients to get a free month of service@thesuperbill.com.

[00:01:17] Laura Reagan: Today's episode is sponsored by traumatherapistnetwork.com. Trauma is real. Healing is possible. Help is available. Find information, resources, and locate a therapist in your area at traumatherapistnetwork.com.

[00:01:34] Laura Reagan: Hi, welcome back to therapy chat. I'm your host, Laura Reagan. Today, I'm very excited to be bringing you a conversation with Dr. Nyasha Grayman and we are talking about nature therapy for traumatic grief. I loved talking with her. She just has a really warm presence. That I could feel in our conversation and I'm sure that her clients can feel it as well.

[00:01:58] Laura Reagan: I'm going to tell you a lot more about Nyasha in just a minute, but first, before we get into our conversation, I just want to make sure you know, that if you're a trauma therapist or a therapist who has experience and training in working with trauma survivors. Even if you don't necessarily normally call yourself a trauma therapist, we need you. Please consider joining trauma therapists network before February 1st. If you join before February 1st for $33 a month, you'll get a beautiful profile listing.

[00:02:30] Laura Reagan: And then beginning in March, you will have access to one call per week. Calls are focused on case consultation, training, self care, and networking and connection. So for only $33 a month, you not only get a great way to market your practice and let clients who are looking for trauma therapy find you, but also you will have this ongoing support of four calls per month and community.

[00:02:56] Laura Reagan: Which we all need. So go to www dot trauma therapist network.com to sign up for that. All right. Now, back to talking about Dr. Grayman. Dr. Nyasha Grayman is a licensed psychotherapist in Maryland USA with certifications in grief counseling, trauma treatment. And telemental health. She holds a bachelor's degree from Spelman college, a master's in counseling from NYU and a PhD in counseling psychology.

[00:03:22] Laura Reagan: Also from New York university. Dr. Grayman has a boutique practice, wisdom counseling, Baltimore LLC, where she specializes in working with bereaved African-American adults. She's also an associate professor of psychology and Africana studies at a Baltimore, Maryland area college. She joined me to talk about her book, Seasonal Therapeutic Encounters with Nature Journal: 52 Experiences for Baltimore -eans.

[00:03:46] Laura Reagan: And she's talking about trauma grief in nature therapy. She talked about why it's important to use embodied practices and healing from trauma and traumatic grief. And she talks about using nature as the co-therapist. So it's really interesting how she structures her practice and she, so whether you're a therapist who's interested in how grief can heal using nature encounters, even how she created her book and how she encourages others to do similar books, which I thought was a beautiful idea. Or if you're a therapist who's interested in how she set up her practice in a way that's very unique. And I thought fascinating. I mean, it makes total sense. You're going to enjoy this conversation. And if you're someone who's grieving, I hope that you'll find some hope and comfort in the ideas that Nyasha has shares in our conversation about how one can heal in nature while grieving. So let's dive right into my conversation with Dr. Nyasha Greenman.

[00:04:56] Laura Reagan: Hi, welcome back to therapy chat. I'm your host, Laura Reagan. And today I'm so happy to be talking with my guest, Dr. Nyasha Grayman. Nyasha. Thank you for coming to therapy chat today.

[00:05:07] Nyasha Grayman: Thank you for inviting me. I'm so glad that we finally made this happen. We've been working on it since the summer.

[00:05:14] Laura Reagan: Yes. Two busy people with many responsibilities, struggling to keep something on the calendar.

[00:05:23] Laura Reagan: And I'm really glad it's working out. I'm grateful to you for being so flexible about it. Absolutely. Yeah. So, um, I've been interested in talking with you ever since I found out about your book, which is called Seasonal Therapeutic Encounters with Nature Journal. Right there, that beautiful name caught my attention.

[00:05:43] Nyasha Grayman: 52 experiences for Baltimore-eans.

[00:05:48] Laura Reagan: Yeah.

[00:05:49] Laura Reagan: And I love that because even that just is so like, it sparked curiosity because it's like 52 experiences for Baltimore-eans. And even some of the things you said when we were talking about it, I thought it's a really cool way that you're doing this. You're not like this is my book. My book is the thing for all to the be all end all, but right.

[00:06:08] Laura Reagan: Write something specific for Baltimore, which is beautiful. Right? Right. Not a place that people always think of as full of nature, but we have so much green here. Absolutely. So before we get into talking about your book, can you just start off by telling our audience a little bit more about who you are and what you do?

[00:06:28] Nyasha Grayman: Sure. So I'm Dr. Nyasha Grayman and I am an African-American grief and bereavement therapist. I have a boutique grief and bereavement therapy practice in Baltimore called Wisdom Counseling Baltimore. And I call it boutique because I take on no more than one new client a month and work with no more than three clients at a time.

[00:06:54] Nyasha Grayman: Because I'm focusing on traumatic grief. And we know that that work is, is very involved and emotionally taxing. And I really put a lot into it in integrative approach. And so I really want to keep the numbers small. I'm also an associate professor of psychology and Africana studies at a Baltimore area college Goucher College, in the county.

[00:07:19] Nyasha Grayman: And I am. A mother and a wife and a fur mama to a one-year old moyen poodle. Yes. That's a little bit about me. I write a lot, a lot of scholarly articles. The journal is my first book, if you want to, uh, you know, I don't know if I really think of it as a book because it's, you know, a journal and I also have a lamentations and hope card deck that is also available, focusing on the experiences of human suffering and hope from a biblical perspective.

[00:08:00] Nyasha Grayman: So my therapy practice does incorporate Christian theology and biblical scholarship. And I operate within the black church tradition. A little bit about the practice and the practice serves African-American adults in Maryland. Exclusively. Beautiful. Thank you.

[00:08:20] Laura Reagan: So there's a lot of pieces to what you just shared that I'm very curious about.

[00:08:25] Laura Reagan: And the first part is traumatic grief. Yes. Yes. Yeah. I mean, I, I thought it was amazing what you just said about how you keep your practice really small and acknowledgement of how, you know, how much energy it takes to do that work.

[00:08:44] Nyasha Grayman: Yes. What's interesting. I, before we started the recording, I was telling you how I am a fan of the podcast and a follower.

[00:08:51] Nyasha Grayman: And I've been following your podcasts probably for a couple of years. And as I was creating the boutique practice, your shows really informed my thinking. So it was both your shows that focused on trauma and trauma therapy and the idea of bottom up processing and also the episodes that focused on grief.

[00:09:14] Nyasha Grayman: And the episodes that focused on nature therapy and they, so they kind of came together and spoke to me in a way that I was already thinking. But yeah, your, your podcast was really instrumental in helping me to solidify this integrative approach that I use. That's also structured. I remember when we first connected electronically. One of the things that you said was that you were really interested in the way that I formatted the website, my practice website, because on the first page, it says, if you're experiencing any of the following symptoms, then you know, my grief therapy services may be useful to you. And the symptoms are listed in a way that are that's consistent with bottom-up processing.

[00:10:04] Nyasha Grayman: So the first symptoms were about physiological symptoms, sensory symptoms, cognitive, emotional social. And I remember you remarked that you thought it was really interesting that I presented that on the front page, on the homepage of the website and I've, I've thought that yeah, your podcast actually helped me to think through how to present what it is that I do and how it is that I work.

[00:10:32] Laura Reagan: Ah, I'm so moved that you found something, you know, beneficial in listening. That really means so much to me. And so nice of you to tell me that. Thank you. Yeah. Absolutely. You're welcome. Yeah. Well, I, I just think that based on what I see and what I saw in your site, you know, this is really beautiful and I keep saying beautiful because it's like, it feels very embodied the way you're presenting the way you work.

[00:11:02] Laura Reagan: And with my experience with working in Baltimore, the city itself. You know, there's, there's a lot of agencies and there's a lot of organizations that are there to serve and there's a lot of need to be served. And, but some of the ways that the organizations try to serve it doesn't feel, it feels like the humanity is missing right now.

[00:11:25] Nyasha Grayman: Right. Well, I thought to myself again, as I was in the process, Of crafting this practice, what would it look like if we actually implemented the science and what we know in terms of best practice, around traumatic experience. And so those elements to me, looked like an embodied practice, a nature-based practice. An expressive practice that incorporated expressive arts, a bottom-up practice. So I appreciate you observing that, that intentionality to pull together what our field is saying. This is what best practice looks like. It looks like incorporating somatics movement. It looks like incorporation of expressive arts and in different ways.

[00:12:17] Nyasha Grayman: And so I wanted to give clients the traumatic grief therapy that I needed. So we already talked about them. I'm not going to tell my whole traumatic loss story, but I am 10 years into a traumatic loss journey. And this is the practice that I offer is the therapy that I needed. That the practitioners just didn't know, you know, was what was called for at the time.

[00:12:48] Laura Reagan: Yeah. I mean, it's just as your time, it just feels like the earth base aspect of it feels really important. Somehow.

[00:12:56] Nyasha Grayman: It's very important. The nature based element to the therapy is foundational. Similar to what some of your other guests have said on the show. I do think of nature as my co-therapist. It's integrated interventions in nature, integrated into every single session.

[00:13:12] Nyasha Grayman: And when I first start working with a client, I'm working with that client every day, five days a week, and then four days and three, we titrate down and they are spending at least 15 minutes. In nature during that session. And I have a virtual practice, but I still have clients and they know this when they sign up to work with me, that we are going to identify a green space, either near your home or near your job, depending on you know, where you're going to be logging on for our sessions.

[00:13:45] Nyasha Grayman: And that is going to be your home green space for our, you know, initially our daily sessions and then our weekly sessions. And so they know that they are going to be outside weather permitting for our sessions. And after the, maybe the mindful walk or whatever mindful experience I'm assigning for those 15 minutes, they may stay outside for the rest of the session.

[00:14:10] Nyasha Grayman: Or they may go in their car for the session or go into another private space. But nature is integral to the work. And so I am not the therapist for you if you do not want to go outside, or if you're not open to that. And people who sign up to work with me, they are open to that. Even if they've never done it before.

[00:14:32] Nyasha Grayman: And a good number have never done it before and think it's a unique experience. Like this is a therapy as well? Oh, absolutely. And then between sessions on the weekends, I assign a nature encounter from the journal. Yeah. And so we have 52 that are in the journals. So there are enough encounters. To last the year, every season.

[00:14:56] Nyasha Grayman: So I want people thinking about it. I want the people that I work with and also people who use the journal, who I don't work with to think about ways that they can be in nature year round.

[00:15:08] Laura Reagan: This is so interesting. So cool. Like, so I'm curious now with the way that you work five days, four days, three days, is it a shorter term model or is like how.

[00:15:21] Laura Reagan: You mentioned that it's structured. So I mean, that part, I still want to ask you about traumatic grief, but this part is like really interesting. I just like to get some of these details.

[00:15:30] Nyasha Grayman: Yeah so, it's structured to the initial week. I say the initial 18 sessions. So initially 18 sessions over eight weeks, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1.

[00:15:41] Nyasha Grayman: And then once a week for the second week. And then the client decides whether they want to continue for open-ended or whether they feel that they have enough resources to continue the grief journey on its own. I think one of the things we talked about before we started recording was the distinction between traumatic grief and grief. Non-traumatic grief. And I think when we're talking about traumatic grief, you're really talking about someone whose symptoms look a lot like post-traumatic stress disorder. So those acute stress, traumatic stress symptoms. So oftentimes in the clients I work with I see primarily overactive sympathetic nervous system responses.

[00:16:26] Nyasha Grayman: I don't see as much of the parasympathetic with the very low energy. I typically see really over-activated sympathetic nervous systems, and we are working on that front end, very intensely to try and stabilize the nervous system. Like I said, after 18 sessions, the client decides whether they want to continue.

[00:16:52] Nyasha Grayman: I've had a range. Most of the clients have continued. And then that may look like three months of work, six months, a year, a year and a half is the longest I've had a client work with me thus far. The practice is still pretty new. It started January, 2020. So we'll see what comes with the, you know, with time. But we're looking at just thinking again about the stabilization and the focus on calming the nervous system.

[00:17:22] Nyasha Grayman: Part of the daily work involves the subs check. So subjective units of distress. And the goal is that by the end of those 18 sessions, That all of those symptoms are below clinical level. And thus far it's been my experience that all of the clients have by the end of 18 sessions had reports of clinical symptoms below distress, clinical distress levels.

[00:17:50] Laura Reagan: That's great. Thank you. So for the traumatic grief and how it's different from non traumatic grief. Is it a question of the symptoms, the person presents? Is it the type of loss or the way that, that the person they love or care about passed? Is that one of the aspects of it? Or like how, how do people know when it's traumatic grief?

[00:18:17] Nyasha Grayman: Well, the way I assess is with the symptoms. And so that's why I front load the psychoeducation on the website. So it is the symptoms and it's the degree of distress that you're experiencing with the symptoms. Not necessarily the way that the loved one died and not necessarily the length of time. Now we do see traumatic grief as being more prevalent.

[00:18:43] Nyasha Grayman: When a loved one has died suddenly. You're more likely to encounter someone who's experiencing traumatic grief symptoms in that state, and also someone who's experiencing disenfranchised grief. So when the loved one has died in a way that has a lot of stigma surrounded, such as death by suicide. And by homicide.

[00:19:05] Nyasha Grayman: So those are most likely to elicit traumatic grief response, but it could be the nature of the death is varied. It's really about the suddenness. And then also thinking about the nature of the attachment to the person who died could also be a main factor in whether or not traumatic grief reactions come up.

[00:19:32] Laura Reagan: Okay. Well, so that makes me wonder about, like, I know you're saying you work with adults and the, when I originally learned about traumatic grief. It was, well, it was childhood traumatic grief, but that doesn't mean, you know, I think a lot of losses and a lot of traumas that occur in childhood have a larger impact because of the innate powerlessness of being a child, being dependent on someone else.

[00:19:58] Nyasha Grayman: Absolutely. And one of the things I find, and I think most people who work with grief find is that grief ends up being a portal to a host of unresolved grief over a lifetime. Yeah. Yeah.

[00:20:17] Laura Reagan: Hey therapists. This is Laura Reagan. If you listen to this show regularly, you're hearing a lot about trauma and attachment, and you probably know these two underlying concerns are what drive most people to seek therapy, regardless of how the symptoms present. The good news is trauma's becoming a buzzword and that's great because more people are discovering.

[00:20:36] Laura Reagan: There's a reason they feel the way they do, and now they can name what they need help with, but they need to find therapists who can help. And that's where you come in, join trauma therapists, networks, therapist directory now at the founding member price of $33 a month. And you'll receive a beautiful listing that can function as a webpage.

[00:20:53] Laura Reagan: If you don't want to set up your own site or even if you have your own and you can include. Links to videos of yourself, blog posts. And you're part of a community right now. We have quarterly calls for all members. Our first one happened in October and it was lovely. Everyone said they really enjoyed it, but I'm adding more content that will begin to be available March 1st, 2022.

[00:21:18] Laura Reagan: And if you sign up for February 1st, you'll be locked in at the founding member price of $33 a month. February 1st, the price is going to go up to $97 a month to reflect added value of these new offerings. And everybody who signs up as a founding member for $33 a month, we'll get all that content beginning March 1st, as long as you keep your membership, I'm really excited about what's to come.

[00:21:43] Laura Reagan: We're going to have weekly. Live calls four per month and one will be a Q and a one will be focused on self care. One will be case consultation, and one will be training on a certain topic. Hurry on over to trauma therapist, network.com to sign up and become a founding member of this beautiful community of wonderful, passionate, and skilled trauma therapists.

[00:22:08] Laura Reagan: We need you, people who have trauma or out there looking for you, and they don't know how to discern. But you specialize in trauma. So come on over to the trauma therapist network and get listed. Join our community and this movement, trauma therapists, network.com.

[00:22:29] Laura Reagan: So when you say a portal, like there's other unresolved grief experiences that the person isn't necessarily pointing to or aware of as impacting them, but.

[00:22:40] Nyasha Grayman: Not as part of the initial presentation that inevitably comes up. Yeah. I would say in a hundred percent of the cases I've worked with. Okay. Life is hard, right?

[00:22:50] Nyasha Grayman: I mean, I don't know what the statistics are around the percentage of individuals who that have experienced adverse childhood experiences, you know, have ACE experiences, but I would suspect it's the majority.

[00:23:05] Laura Reagan: Well, I know that 61 percent of adults have experienced at least one adverse childhood experience, but the whole, you, not that I'm critical of the study, by no means am I critical of that.

[00:23:18] Laura Reagan: But it's the one event could be, you know, loss of a parent that's during childhood. That's a huge, that's not really like one event. It's like all the ways the person wasn't there. Right, right, right. That's another point from the point that they passed, right.

[00:23:35] Nyasha Grayman: That's a, that's a really good point. And then thinking about, again, that distinction between traumatic grief and non traumatic grief, I think the stats show that maybe 30% of people who are bereaved are going to fall into the traumatic grief category that a good 70% of folks, you know, traverse a grief journey without needing a therapeutic intervention, but the, for the 30% they need a more intensive source of support.

[00:24:11] Laura Reagan: You know, and it just, when I hear you say about being together five days a week, you know, I don't know what comes to mind is like that idea of just walking along that journey with the person.

[00:24:21] Nyasha Grayman: Yeah. Yeah. I think of it as companioning, which Alan Wolf, grief educator and writer says, I love that language that you are companioning. That's the vision I have. I visualize myself companioning the person on a trail in nature as they're experiencing their journey and from my own personal experience of traumatic loss, I'm a companion that maybe knows just a little bit about what's coming up ahead as we're walking on the path and may be able to suggest maybe we go this, this way, let's go by the stream or let's watch out for the change in weather that's coming or the branches that are going to be falling. And that's, that's how I see myself as a companion on the journey, [00:25:10] Laura Reagan: That sounds so healing. Thank you. Another piece of what you were talking about, that kind of surprised me just now is that you're able to do nature-based therapy with your clients virtually.

[00:25:23] Nyasha Grayman: Right. That people should not feel as though they're limited by technology. My clients have been completely on board for virtual nature therapy and it's worked well. Now, I usually engage in my own nature-based practice before I get on. So I, I'm not outside with the clients. I'm typically inside while they're outside.

[00:25:48] Nyasha Grayman: But I do my practice right before I get on with them. And so I have a good sense even of what the weather is like and whether we should move it inside. But yeah, I'm, I'm indoors and they're outdoors.

[00:26:04] Laura Reagan: Is there a reason why that's a good way to do it, that you know, that you're not outdoors too?

[00:26:10] Nyasha Grayman: I don't think I have a really good reason other than I think I've thought a little bit about logistics. I don't want to find myself dealing with racing back to the office space. You know, when. The client is logging on right before I log on. I like to engage in a, you know, a deep breathing, paced, breathing practice, and just be centered and settled.

[00:26:38] Nyasha Grayman: So I don't want to be on the move while the client is also on the move. And like I said, dealing possibly with the logistics of a street noise or traffic, you know, things of that nature.

[00:26:51] Laura Reagan: Yeah, I can, I, that makes sense. And I can see like that it could be that it's more, you're kind of eliminating that you would have distractions, so you can kind of focus on just them and their experience while you're where you are.

[00:27:05] Nyasha Grayman: I can focus on them and their experience. I can focus on their environment, which I'm doing as well. So I'm trying to actually virtually place myself. In the space they are occupying in nature. And so if I'm asking the client to do a mindful walk, observing the trees, the height of the trees, the width of the trees, the width of the trunk, the bark on the trunk, they are on FaceTime, you know, using their secure, simple practice portal.

[00:27:34] Nyasha Grayman: I can see the trees that they see as well.

[00:27:36] Laura Reagan: Yeah, that's really cool. Okay. So I was wondering if you could talk a little bit about what's in your book. What, what are these 52 exercises so not that you need to tell me all 52, right.

[00:27:53] Nyasha Grayman: Just to get a flavor. I, I, I think of the work as operating in cycles. In harmony with the seasons.

[00:28:01] Nyasha Grayman: And so the 52 weeks are divided by the seasons and not quite the seasons as they change with the calendar year. But for example, September, October, and November, I classify as the fall season and have activities for each of the weeks of that season. And so I want to make sure that I'm introducing or re-introducing clients to natural rhythms that happen throughout the calendar year that they may overlook in everyday life, because we're so busy, we spend so much time indoors.

[00:28:38] Nyasha Grayman: So I will in October at the beginning of October, Remind the client that this is honey making season. And I am going to assign you the task of going to Oregon Ridge in Baltimore county and going to their honey festival and learn about how to make honey just reminding - not just. I want to remind clients that they are a part of nature, that they exist within a larger ecosystem that exists within a larger universe.

[00:29:13] Nyasha Grayman: And so the encounters are structured to remind clients of that, because we know that when you're experiencing grief in particular, your vision. Your thinking is so your focus is so narrow, your ability to attend is so narrow and I use the nature experience as a way to rebroaden your horizon and your perspective.

[00:29:39] Nyasha Grayman: And so at the end of summer, I assign a sunflower picking at the sunflower garden in Westminster. I also want people getting out. So nature is amazing. It's sleep and nature. I feel like those are my two elixirs. I focus on helping clients develop, you know, good sleep hygiene, and I want them engrossed in nature.

[00:30:05] Nyasha Grayman: I want them getting out and about. Across the state of Maryland. So I do also assign journeys to Eastern shore to walk the trails that Harriet Tubman occupied. And so thinking also about my practice, focusing exclusively on African Americans, there's also an incorporation of Maryland's African-American history in the nature encounters.

[00:30:31] Nyasha Grayman: They need to go to Fells Point where Frederick Douglas lived. They go to an Arboretum also on Eastern shore, and there is a self guided freedom trail. At an Arboretum on Eastern shore that talks about the role of nature in the fight and flight to freedom. And so that, you know, is, is something that is in there.

[00:30:57] Nyasha Grayman: And it's intentionally in there in the month of June around Juneteenth, which commemorates the emancipation. Or the realization of, you know, formerly enslaved Africans in Texas, that they were emancipated. And I think really valuable, equally valuable. There are encounters that take place over the winter.

[00:31:17] Nyasha Grayman: That folks are not just to be in their house in the winter. I want you to feel the cold air. I want you to see what the moon looks like in January. I want you to. Visit one of the centers in Baltimore and see if you can spot a ball that you go Ben, and think that and understand that this is the time of year to try to do these things that I want you to pick lavender, you know, from a lavender farm.

[00:31:42] Nyasha Grayman: So that is a sensory experience of the holistic sensory experience. Yes. Yes. I think helps with symptoms of depression because they get up and out. I mean, if you're, if you're a client -

[00:31:59] Laura Reagan: It's like undoing isolation.

[00:32:00] Nyasha Grayman: That's right.

[00:32:02] Nyasha Grayman: Absolutely. And undoing isolation in a way that is less likely to overwhelm because you're in an outdoor space.

[00:32:12] Nyasha Grayman: So you're not in a crowded indoor space contending with a lot of different bodies or a lot of interpersonal interaction. You can be alone together.

[00:32:22] Laura Reagan: Yes. Well, this is so lovely. I mean, um, everything you're talking about when you talk about being connected to a larger universe, And that's a spirituality, right.

[00:32:33] Laura Reagan: You know, important sense of being, it's not just me, I'm not alone. I'm part of something in the connection to like ancestors, like Harriet Tubman and, and people who've come before. And, you know, I mean, Maryland has so much beauty and rich history, some of which we hear less about, but thankfully that's changing.

[00:32:57] Laura Reagan: And this is part of that, too.

[00:32:59] Nyasha Grayman: Absolutely. And one of my goals when I created the journal was to create a template that I hoped and do hope will be replicated in other locales. So I want people to think about their place, where they are situated and think of what experiences they could offer to their clients.

[00:33:23] Nyasha Grayman: And so I think. That's one thing that's really unique about the text. I have a lot of nature therapy books and really amazing ideas. And I thought, I think I want to create one that is specific to where I work. And I also wanted a way to organize and package for my clients. What I do, and to put it all together, just that's actually how it started was just wanting to put it together in a neat package that I could give to clients.

[00:33:55] Nyasha Grayman: And as a resource and a reference while we're working, rather than sending, you know, each individual assignment, email, or something. Exactly. Right. That is actually, that was the original motivation for creating the journal.

[00:34:11] Laura Reagan: You know, I just want to say one thing about that perspective that you just shared about this being a template for other people to create something similar, that's such an unselfish, generous, you know, way of approaching this, that you're not like, this is what I was kind of alluding to at the beginning.

[00:34:26] Laura Reagan: Like, this is mine, this is mine, you know, competition it's like, this is something that, you know, and it kind of goes along with the idea of nature based therapy. This is for all of us. Yeah, here, we can use it and it can help us. And it's, nature's free. I mean, some of the places may not be free, but you know, to go into, but you know, it's like very, it feels like connected in a way to people, humanity, I don't know the right words.

[00:34:57] Nyasha Grayman: No, I understand what you mean. I mean, and that, that was the goal, right? That, that I think that we are in a society, not, I think I know that we are in a society that commodifies everything that tries to commodify everything, including nature.

[00:35:14] Nyasha Grayman: And I mean, they're, they're problematic. Considerations, even thinking about the journal and the land that you know was occupied by indigenous nations and, and folks, which I also incorporate in there, but this is not something that we need to continue to try and seek ownership over. So yeah, if you are a therapist practicing in New York and you want to integrate nature, look at the journal, look at, I mean, you don't even need to buy the journal to look at the table of contents and just get a sense of how it's organized and think about the spaces in your environment that you could, you could pull together for, for client or other people.

[00:36:01] Nyasha Grayman: Non-clients.

[00:36:02] Laura Reagan: Yeah. That's what it feels like when you said about land rights. You know, colonizers coming here and claiming, oh, this is our land. We, this is, we discovered this and where the people who were here before didn't they didn't do it that way. They didn't say this land belongs to us. Or like, we are the people who live on this land, you know?

[00:36:24] Laura Reagan: So that's sort of what it feels like with your book is like, I did this and you can do it and we can all have it, and it can be something beautiful that everyone can share and experience. And the more the merrier and the more, you know, who contribute to this makes it better. That's a, like a collectivist type of thinking.

[00:36:43] Nyasha Grayman: I would love to develop a collection of these journals.

[00:36:48] Nyasha Grayman: And so it's interesting. That you say that because one of my friends said, oh, you should make this journal for this area of New York. You should make one for Atlanta. I was like, no, no, no, no. A therapist in Atlanta, someone in Atlanta can make one for Atlanta, I feel no, you know, sense of obligation or calling, ownership to create exactly ownership over the series.

[00:37:14] Nyasha Grayman: Like now I'm creating the series, the San Francisco edition, the Seattle Washington. No, no, you can, you, you do that. You do that and I will buy it and I will be happy to support it. And when I visit those spaces, I will delight in, you know, having encounters that you've recommended.

[00:37:35] Laura Reagan: And, and hashtagging and putting them on Instagram

[00:37:38] Nyasha Grayman: And hashtag that's right. That's right.

[00:37:43] Laura Reagan: So I know we have to wrap up, but can you tell people where they can find all the good stuff you're doing? Thank you. Thank you for being here. I've really enjoyed this so much, but thank you.

[00:37:54] Nyasha Grayman: I've enjoyed it as well. So speaking of hashtag Instagram. It's the best way to find me is probably Instagram that Instagram will take you to, you know, all of the tributaries that I immersed in, and that is at Baltimore grief on Instagram.

[00:38:13] Laura Reagan: Wonderful.

[00:38:15] Laura Reagan: Nyasha, really thank you so much for being my guests on therapy chat. I have loved talking with you today and I hope everyone feels as inspired as I do when they're listening.

[00:38:25] Nyasha Grayman: Thank you, Laura. Thank you for having me. I love therapy chats. If you're not following therapy chat, I recommend you do hashtag therapy chat.

[00:38:35] Laura Reagan: Hashtag follow at Baltimore grief.

[00:38:39] Nyasha Grayman: Thank you so much, Laura.

[00:38:40] Laura Reagan: Thank you.

[00:38:44] Laura Reagan: Therapists. If your practice doesn't accept insurance, go to the superbill.com to get started with superbill, a service that can help your clients get reimbursed. Superbill is free for therapists and your clients can use the code therapy chat to get a free month of the service at the superbill. Also, you can earn $100 for every therapist you refer after your clients complete the one-time HIPAA compliant onboarding process.

[00:39:06] Laura Reagan: You can just send us their super bills. Super bill will then file claims for your clients and track them all the way to reimbursement by helping your clients get reimbursed without the stress of dealing with insurance companies. Superbill can increase your new client acquisition rate by over 25%. The next time a potential client asks.

[00:39:22] Laura Reagan: If you accept insurance, let them know you partner with superbill to help your clients receive reimbursement effortlessly. Visit the super bill.com to get started.

[00:39:34] Laura Reagan: Today's episode was sponsored by trauma therapist network. Find information, resources, and connect with a trauma therapist near you. At trauma therapist network.com. Traumas real healing is possible. Help is available. Trauma therapist network.com.

[00:39:49] Announcer: Thank you for listening to this therapy chat with your host, Laura Reagan LCSW-C.

[00:39:56] Announcer: For more information, please visit therapy chat podcast.com.